BLACK HISTORY. AMERICAN HISTORY. OUR HISTORY!

"Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."
George Santayana

MEMORIES FROM "THE DAY"

Sis. Robbie Davis: During her 4th or 5th grade summer, Freedom Riders came to Vicksburg and set up a tent. As children they went every day. Her mother fed the Freedom Riders on their porch and her father let them sleep on the porch. Three civil rights workers were killed in Neshoba County, MS, in 1964. She didn't realize the bravery of her parents or the danger to their family until much later.

Sis. Mary Townsend: During the Civil Rights period, she went shopping for shoes in a store on the Square in Oxford. With a narrow foot, she wanted to try them on before buying. She was told by the store clerk that she could buy the shoes, but she could not try them on first.

Sis. Opoline Kelly: She remembers the tense climate when James Meredith first came to Ole Miss in 1962. Riots erupted on campus. Two people were killed and over 300 people were injured. There were hundreds of National Guard troops in Oxford to keep the peace. Those troops stationed on the outskirts of town were tasked with searching all vehicles coming into town to ensure no weapons were being brought in.

Sis. Lula Hill: She remembers that during the segregation period, Black people could get water from Neilsons' "colored" water fountain and use the "colored" toilet at the bus station. There was also a "colored" toilet behind the black-owned café and shoe shop in the alley.
